Farming in the Crimea.

An English ploughman, who has just returned from the Crimea, whither he had been sent to teach the natives the use of the Bedford reaping and ploughing machine, says the land near Sebastopol is being thoroughly cultivated, and throughout the Crimea there are no farms in the hands of German colonists whose management would do no discredit to the estate of the Duke of Bedford. As for the fortress, the building dismantled during the bombardment, are now overgrown with tall tress and rank vegetation, the whole scene, with its mound and burial places, forming a striking picture of the devastating horrors of war.—Seco. Am. Journal.
